Performance review

The year 2022 proved to be a complicated one for our strategy. The main driver of underperformance was our portfolio structure. Our overexposure to quality stocks on the long side penalized us in a year marked by a very strong outperformance of the market's value pocket. market. This deep rotation in favor of value and to the detriment of quality was mainly triggered by the triggered by the context of rising inflation and interest rates. Quality stocks logically have valuation multiples valuation multiples (structurally higher than average growth prospects and lower cyclicality). Given their longer duration, these stocks suffer disproportionately in phases of rising interest rates. Despite the adoption of risk limits of +5/-5% on this style factor, the fund's performance was strongly impacted by the unprecedented depth of impacted by the unprecedented depth of the rotation, particularly on growth stocks. This phenomenon was compounded by a marked short squeeze in November.

At the beginning of 2023, we note that the valuation premium between the average of our longs and the average of our shorts of our shorts has narrowed, allowing us to put the economic performance of companies at the heart of stock market performance. In this context, our portfolio structure should allow us to allow us to capture these performance differentials.

In December, PHILEAS L/S EUROPE declined by 0.37%, recording 1.30% losses on the long portfolio and 0.93% gains on the short portfolio in a market down 3.44% (Stoxx 600).

In Industry (-22 bps), the declines in Schneider and ASML were only partially offset by gains on our hedges.

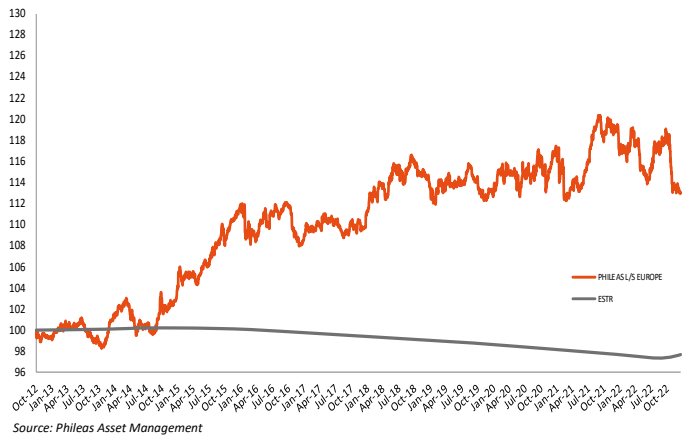

In IT Services (+16 bps), we benefited from the rebound of Teleperformance and the good performance of Spie and SSP. Spie's positive performance over the year 2022 reflects the improvement in the company's fundamentals. Well positioned in markets benefiting from the energy transition, Spie should growth over the next few years, while its valuation multiples remain reasonable. Teleperformance's share price has recovered after the sharp fall in November. This sharp fall, which we believe to be exaggerated given the low materiality of the controversy.

In Food/Beverages/HPC (-13 bps), Campari and Symrise underperformed on the downside without any reason.

In Automotive (-11 bps), Porsche gave back some of its gains since its spin off at the end of September.

In Consumer (-10 bps), some of the hedges held up well in the downturn, such as Swatch, Marks & Spencer and Fielmann.
